DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(a) the invention was known or used by others in this country, or patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country, before the invention thereof by the applicant for a patent.

1. Claims 1-3, 5-9, 11-17 and 19-28 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(a) as being anticipated by Huang et al.'s article, "Using Word-Level ATPG and Modular Arithmetic Constraint-Solving Techniques for Assertion Property Checking."

As to claims 1-3, 5-7, 11-17, 19-21 and 25-28, Huang et al. teach a method for generating a test vector for functional verification of circuits comprising: Providing a representation of a circuit that comprises control logic component and a datapath logic component (page 2); reading one or more vector generation targets (page 2); performing word-level ATPG justification on the control logic component to obtain a control logic solution (page 2); extracting one or more arithmetic functions for the datapath logic component based on the control logic solution (page 6); and solving the arithmetic functions using a modular constraint solver (page 6).

The reference also teaches the ATPG justification step to comprise performing word-level implication on circuit components related to the targets (page 3). Moreover, page 6 of the Huang et al. reference teaches determining possible solutions for the nonlinear equations and solving them using one possible solution for the nonlinear equations as boundary conditions (page 6). With respect to claims that vector generation target comprises a signal value, a relation among a set of signals and a sequence of relations among a set of signals, page 2 of the Huang et al. reference discloses the same.

As to claims 8, 9 and 22-24, Huang et al. disclose a method for performing word-level ATPG justification on a target circuit wherein an internal control signal of the target circuit is identified (page 3); making a decision on such control signal (page 3); performing word-level implication on circuit components related to the target circuit (page 3); determining if a conflict arises from the word-level implication (page 3); and determining if the one or more control signals are justified (page 3).

Allowable Subject Matter

2. Claims 4 and 18 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

The primary reason is obtaining a second control logic solution by backtracking to perform word-level ATPG justification on the control logic component, which is initially dependent on the outcome of solving the one or more arithmetic functions; extracting arithmetic functions for the datapath logic component based on the second control logic solution; and solving the arithmetic functions using the modular constraint solver.

Art Unit: 2825

3. Claim 10 is objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

The primary reason is identifying a second internal control signal of the target circuit in response to determining that the one or more control signals are not justified; making a decision on the identified second internal control signal; performing word-level implication on the circuit components related to the target circuit; determining if a conflict arises from the word-level implication; and determining if the one or more control signals are justified.
